Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Cooler and mostly dry conditions will persist through the weekend as high pressure delivers brisk and dry northerly flow to the region. Even colder air is in store for early next week.

Medford Weather:

The two primary concerns during the week will be snowfall over the Cascades during the travel weekend and very cold temperatures midweek. Light to moderate precipitation forecast over much of the area through the week.

Reno Weather:

Cold temperatures will continue today with near average temperatures by Sunday ahead of another cold front. Light snow showers are possible with the front mainly north of I-80 through early next week, but a much colder low pressure system will provide very cold weather with better potential for widespread snow showers Tuesday.

San Francisco Weather:

Freezing temperatures primarily over inland areas will modify slightly the next couple of nights; however, the chilly air mass will remain over Central California through much of the upcoming week with a reinforcing shot of cold air arriving late Tuesday and Wednesday. This next system has the potential of bringing strong, gusty offshore winds especially to the north and East Bay and Santa Cruz Mountains.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Mainly dry weather will continue for the next few days with north winds and frosty overnight lows. Stronger north winds and a few mountains showers may be possible for early or middle of next week, followed by more cold overnight temperatures.

Hanford Weather:

A cool northerly flow will prevail over the region as high pressure remains off the West Coast. As the high moves inland by early next week, temperatures are expected to moderate slightly Sunday and Monday. Another storm system will bring colder weather to the region by midweek.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

High pressures building into the Great Basin will produce gusty northeast winds for parts of the area through Saturday. Wind sheltered areas will remain chilly at night through the weekend. A large low pressure system may bring unsettled weather to the region for the early and middle part of next week along with more below normal temperatures.

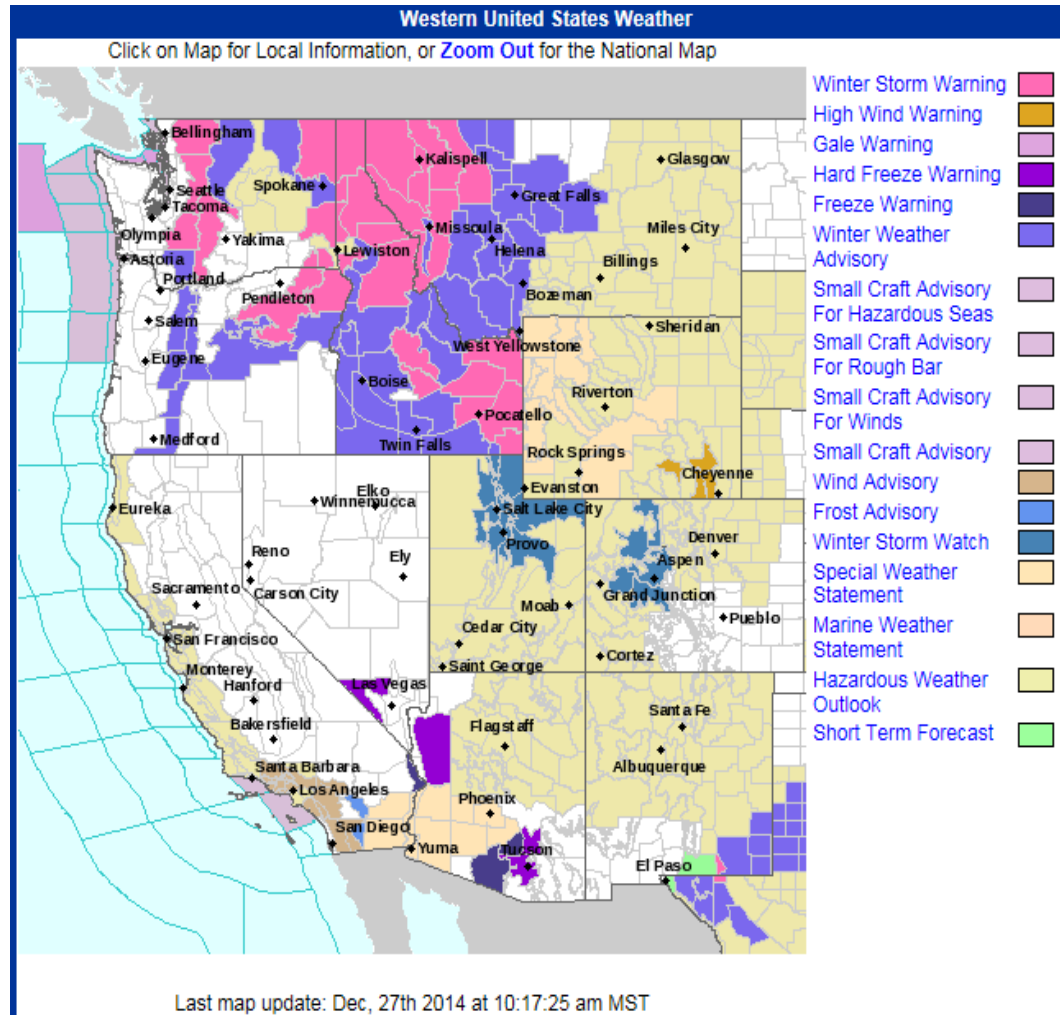

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Chilly weather will continue through the rest of the weekend with areas of frost in wind-sheltered locations again for Saturday night, mainly away from the coast; otherwise, clear skies will prevail through the weekend. The nights will be a little bit warmer early next week as clouds increase. A storm system will move south into Southern California Tuesday afternoon through Wednesday bringing rain and showers to the region. This will be a cold storm with snow levels possibly down to 2000 to 2500 feet at times. Fair weather will return late Thursday or Friday but temperatures will continue below seasonal normal.

Southeast California Weather:

Below normal temperatures are expected this weekend and early next week with occasional high clouds. Another cold and possibly wet low pressure system will move into the region by midweek with the potential for desert rain and mountain snow. Dry but cool weather is expected to return by next weekend.
